

The future is the superimposition of all the possibilities that are still open. They haven't broken up yet.

All open possibilities overlap and are of the same form and substance.

Present is the event of the moment of separation of possibility into separate versions of myself, my fellow human beings and the world.

Synonyms for the present are: conscientia, consciousness, suffering, lust, coincidence.

The past is the memory of my version of myself and those around me in my version of the world.

Every event has a cause. Every cause is an event.

Before all time and outside of space and time is the starting point of all events.

After all time and outside of space and time, all events are known. This is the end point.

Beginning point, end point and the overlapping possibilities, form of the same form, substance of the same substance are an indistinguishable unit.

This indistinguishable unity is perfect knowledge and a quiet timelessness and no lust, no suffering, no burden of decision, no chance, no presence.

But since the knowledge is perfect at this point, the end point from there as we are conceived and born must live, love, suffer, die and rise.

And that is indistinguishable from the resurrection of everything that has lived or could have lived.