

Calvinism in the United States of America

A nation has only been understood and can only be understood if one knows its spiritual foundations. The spiritual foundation of the United States of America is Calvinist extremism. Calvinist ideology arose in Europe at the time of the Reformation and was exported to the North American colonies of England, where it mixed with the conceptual tools of the Enlightenment and thus came back to Europe as a fundamentalist ideology. To this day, it shapes the ideology of the European elites in business and politics.

Calvinism appeared on the scene with John Calvin when the Roman Catholic Church sold safe places in heaven with the sale of indulgences.

Martin Luther uncovered the fraud, using Gutenberg's technology to reveal the fraud with which popes and cardinals financed their wars and their luxuries.

Calvin ended the fire scam by putting out the blaze. For him, people could not hope for salvation. Man was fundamentally doomed. Only the chosen elites, who proved through capitalist success that they were chosen, could hope for salvation.

This view of man shaped Europe and America and was the basis for colonialism and imperialism.

Calvinism provides the spiritual basis for imperialism and exploitation and secures the ideological basis for using every form of violence and injustice against those who think differently and always feeling right and on the right side.

Because if man fundamentally cannot hope for salvation, the chosen ones are allowed to exploit, fight and oppress the poor, those who think differently and other peoples without restraint, because the success of the oppression shows their chosenness.

One's chosenness, manifested in political, economic, and military success, simultaneously justifies the exploitation and oppression of others, who thus prove corrupt rather than chosen.

In the United States, Calvinism became the ideology of justification and the explanatory model for all social strata, for citizens and elites.

So Calvinism swept the British nobility out of the country and replaced them with godly elect, to whom everything is then permitted, because now not only does the end justify the means, but success confirms election.

The expulsion of the English from the then nascent United States symbolized the rise of a fundamentalist, Calvinist extremism now enlightenedly calling itself Liberalism. A chosen nation is born from the roots of Calvinism.

And so extremist Calvinism forms the ideological basis for the delusion of a whole nation to be chosen before God and to prove that to themselves and the world with violence, war and capitalism.
