

My mother gave me the image of the world that presents itself to me: life, art and faith are passed on through altruism.

I learned how I look at the world from my father and my brother.

From my father I have:

Life arises and develops through evolution:

His interest in biology and fossils taught me that. Knowledge arises through evolution:

What I got from him is that we only understand what we can replicate.

There is no spiritual world independent of things.

The steam engine, telephone and computer were the best analogies of human life at the time.

I got from my brother:

Knowledge is becoming more and more virtual. Life is becoming more and more virtual.

He taught me the one with the Commodore logo for the C64 that he gave me.

From myself I have:

Coincidence is the superimposition of mutually independent chains of events.

That came to my mind sometime when I was in elementary school

At the end of my elementary school days, I addressed the first 2 points that I got from my father in class:

The teacher strongly disagreed. There must be a spirit world independent of things, and our spirit sits in the body and controls the world like a puppeteer controls puppets, because otherwise there is no resurrection. I knew he was wrong. However, I took his opinion for the "official view" and even searched for a spirit world myself. All future teachers also believed in a spirit world. But in the end it wasn't believable. The teachers who didn't believe in a spirit world probably kept silent.

So I turned my back on religion and saw it as just a valuable element in our culture's history. I went from bad to worse. Because as an alternative, left-wing socialism offered itself, which knew no spirit world and pretended to be "scientific". So I turned away from everything inherent in my culture and uncritically embraced everything that called itself scientific socialism.

So I lost the ground under my feet and with it the connection to my culture and all my life I only did wrong things.

Then something happened in August 2019:

Google claimed to have made a breakthrough in quantum computing.

So I did some research and came across David Deutsch. David Deutsch comes from Israel and teaches and researches quantum computers in England. In 1994 he wrote an ideological book. The book remains controversial to this day. I wish I had read it in 1994. I only read it in 2019.

In this book he says that you only need to know 4 things,

It was the 4 pillars that I got from my brother, my father and myself, I was amazed:

1 Life arises through evolution,

2 Knowledge arises through evolution,

3 knowledge is becoming more and more virtual, life is becoming more and more virtual,

4 There is no such thing as coincidence, coincidence is the overlapping of independent worlds

All four pillars together, according to David Deutsch, mean that there is no spirit world independent of things and that the world necessarily develops as Judaism and Christianity testify.

In 2019 I gained three insights. All my teachers have spread their personal dualism. The recognized worldviews know no dualism and are monistic. Turning away from my culture and religion was wrong and made me live a wrong life.

If I had read the book when it came out in 1994, I would have understood a lot better. So far the book has had only bad reviews.

It's the best book I've ever read:

David Deutsch: The Fabric of Reality

After that he wrote another book (David Deutsch: The Beginning of Infinity), which is even better, but not as exciting.
